and enrich himself at their expense in a short time. xtol it as such. How little does the Age know

Three hundred farming families make nothing like as many purchases in the course of the year as the same number of city families, and yet they make upon an average from twenty to thirty thousand. They lose their time and that of their eams in neighboring towns and villages: they run in debt to the Merchants; get entangled in lawsuits, mortgage their farms, and are in the end generally sold out and ruined. The farms of the country are falling rapidly into the hands of Country Merchants, Shavers and Banks; and in time our independent farmers will become tenants, cultivating the soil of others, and will sink-when time has prought about a thick population—into as dependent and miscrable a condition as the Peasantry of Europe. The titled Aristocracy or Feudality of Europe will not be revived, but we shall have a Commercial Feudality, which will be more meanly oppressive and exacting. Association will save the enermous intermediate profits, spoken of above, which amount to twenty fold all the taxes that people pay; it will do away also with the endless quarrels, conflicts, twenty fold all the taxes that people pay; it will do away also with the endless quarrels, conflicts, frauds, overreaching and double-dealing which now take place between buyers and sellers, and which are most prolific sources of discords and lawsuits.

An Association would buy all its goods or objects of consumption at wholesale, and at the lowest cash prices, and would take great pains to obtain them of good qualities and free from adulteration. It would furnish them at cost price to the Members,—transportation and a small commission only added.

The inhabitants of an Association would obtain their goods at half and a quarter what they now pay for them, and the avoidance of the frauds and extortions of the present system would alone attach them to Association and excite a disgust for aur false Societies. The Commerce of the World absorbs one-half the preduct of the labor of the Societies. The Commerce of the World absorbs one-half the preduct of the labor of the Societies. The Commerce of the World absorbs one-half the preduct of the labor of the Societies. The Commerce of the World absorbs one-half the preduct of the labor of the Societies. The Commerce of the World absorbs one-half the preduct of the labor of the Societies and Societi pay for them, and the avoidance of the frauds and extortions of the present system would alone attach them to Association and exite a disgust for aur false Societies. The Commerce of the World absorbs one-half the product of the labor of the Producing Classes; it is the master of Productive Industry, and controls effectually the Press, Legislation and Governments. It has replaced in most countries the Military power, and will soon be Dictator of the World.

Dictator of the World.

The City of New-York alone must cost the Country at least One Hundred Millions of Dollars ser annum, and other Cities and Towns in proportion. What sums have not the Producing lasses to pay for carrying on Exchanges of Pro-lucts! It will be answered that Commerce gives ife to Society: it does in a few streets in large Cities, but the Country is monotonous and dead. When Association becomes general, there will be WOOD SCREWS.—New-England inch to $4 inches, for sale by the manufacturers' agest.

Mr. Clendening called. I keep the Washing-ington Hotel at Richmond; am not acquainted with Jno. P. Caldwell; I do not know Monroe Edwards. A man by the name of Caldwell put up with me on the night of the 1st of Sept. He and some baggage which was brought in by the sorter. He came out about 11 o'clock at night. We had no particular conversation. He registered his name in my book. Here it is, and here is the name under date of Sept. 1st "Caldwell, La. — Only one train of cars comes in at that time." It is from Washington: I have seen that person since: I see him now—he is the prisoner at the har. I think no person was in company with him He lodged with me that night. I recollect his askng in the morning where Banks were; he asked for no one in particular. I told him in Main street. I should think this was about 8 or 9 o'clock; I and never seen him before that night; he staid two nights and one day; he took breakfast and dinner; I do not recollect about supper; I cannot say whether he left the Hotel immediately after asking the question or not; I recollect seeing him again before dinner, and between dinner and tea. At the last time I had conversation with him on general topics; I do not remember what was said.— He left on the morning of the 3d, before I was up; at about 4 o'clock I heard from the servant; ne told me nothing of it before. I next saw him at the Tombs. The train for Fredericksburg leaves Cross-examined by Mr. Evarts .- A man named

Quarles was at my house on the 1st September. I can't say when he came or how long he stayed. I saw him at dinner. I recollect no conversation with him. I knew him—I think he does not live in my neighborhood. I think I recollect a man when the same that the does not have the same we had a same than the same we had named Barclay at my hotel that day. We had taken possession of the house that day. I don't recollect ever having seen Mr. Barclay before nor since; nor can I say whether I should know him again. The name of James Crosby is on my Register under date of the 14th. Don't remember any thing of him-can't tell any thing about him or his whiskers. Don't know that I should knew him again. On the 7th April last a man named Pollock is registered as having lodged with me. I remember nothing at all about him. On May 11th a man named James Johnson is registered as having stopped with me. I recollect nothing about him. I cannot tell how many persons usually stop at my hotel such month—the Register will tell. The number varies from day to day: perhaps from 5 to 20. I went to the Tombs about the 1st Nov. I think with Mr. Lownds I believe. I had been on a visit to the North and stopped in the city. I went to the office of Mr. Lowndes partly by request f my agent and partly from my curiowity to see

I saw Mr. Argentine in September, between the 20th and 25th at my house. He inquired about Mr. Caldwell. I told him such a man put up with me; he asked a description of his person. I spoke of his general appearance, but I can't say what I
